It was tested to work with with latest version of operating system like vcDs 11.11.3.On the Internet, it is well-known to use HTML (HyperText Markup Language), XHTML (Extensible HyperText Markup Language) and similar languages to create pages on the World Wide Web (WWW). An example of an HTML page is shown in FIG. 1. Typically, a browser program is used to send information to and display information on a WWW

page. Typically, a browser program receives text information in a human-readable format, such as UTF-8 format, displays the text information and provides the user with the option of “viewing” the text information in a non-human-readable format such as HTML format. Unfortunately, many documents on the WWW are comprised of several screens or views and, as a result, a user can navigate between screens or views and information from one screen or view can be referenced in another view. However, current browsers do not provide a mechanism to directly reference information in a referenced view. As a result, currently, a user must either navigate away from a referenced view and return to the original view to reference information or the user must display the referenced view and determine the relative position of the referenced information in that view, as shown in FIG. 2. This process is time consuming, frustrating and/or undesirable in many situations. What is needed is a method and system for directly referencing a view that was navigated to, as opposed to a view that is displayed in a browser window. We have added a Gift Upgrades feature that allows you to gift an account upgrade to another member, just in time for the holiday season.
