By Friday, Evo-complete champion Jason “Mew2King” Zimmerman has officially announced to move back to America permanently. You may know him as the first player to use EVO’s ground game to defeat Samus Aran, known as one of the most difficult characters to accomplish the feat. Zimmerman followed up by winning BlazBlue: Chrono Phantasma, Street Fighter V, Guilty Gear Xrd, Persona 5, and most recently, Smash 4. In the past, one of his biggest rants was at a Capcom tournament he was playing in. So should we be surprised? Well according to Zimmerman, he isn’t that surprised. According to his Twitter post, he will be moving in June, he said: “I have decided to move to the United States permanently. Therefore, I will be stopping competing for Team Evil at EVO 5... the biggest tournament in the world” – Jason Zimmerman I have decided to move to the United States permanently. Anyone who has followed Evo knows the influence of his tier lists and strategies to beat players like Delphi and Hibiki. His comments here basically confirm what people have expected since Evo for the past two years: he is coming home. No matter where Zimmerman moves, America is ready for him. Thoughts? Magnitude Next month a $100,000 "Donation" will be brought to YHA for the curating of a site. You will appear on the YHA site, BEFORE agreeing to this PLEASE take a few moments to read this blog - It's more than just a "Donation". The "Donation" appears on the site alongside the Kerry Centre. It is also a Sign over the site/land. As at 15th of August "I" did the work, effort and expense of spending 6 months working on this. As with any project, it was way beyond my abilities. In fact, I think only a few extremely smart people would take on this task. The submission process is fairly strict. You can't present just your site so the work has been picked up by some very qualified people. The cost of this is dear to me and I felt I had to take a step backwards to look after myself. I asked to be left in no doubt as to my thoughts about YHA. The support I have received from the Board and NSWFA has been unsurpassable. But, I can't hold back much more from the rest of you after a relatively long period in silence. This is what my work will appear as on YHA. It will be listed at the bottom of Ripponlea ANZACS. HUB 3- Section 145- In addition to the online submission process, there is a window of opportunity to lodge letters/documents with the site curator or the NSWFA. Such letters must: · state the source of the information that would replace the annotation of the marking within the existing specification. · meet any “critical” criteria by which a proposal becomes entitled to be considered alongside the proposal received by the website curator or NSWFA · be sent as a written summary (not a sound file) or electronic manuscript with a schematic or digital map/image. We have been warned by YHA that other information could be used for the evaluation process. Further information will be available if this happens. My advice is to not be unduly excited or worried by the debate that you will have with whoever you speak with in YHA. These are people who have a PH.D. in some form or another. They are not going to be swayed by “cold reasoning”.

Dark Fracture is a game about loss, suicide and friendship. You play as Sarah, a scientist at Stonehenge who researches the effects of the sameing. You are sent to the famous English landmark to test the extraordinary ability of a hospital patient who claims to have dreamt a dream where human souls were being taken away. The hospital treats troubled minds, and you need to find out if the patient is telling the truth... or if he is completely insane and just using you to see if his power can work. Key Features: An immersive moody atmosphere A truly terrifying experience A unique story by Maciek Szczygiel A protagonist you can believe in A game where every choice matters A classic horror game design - scary environments, irrational entities, oppressive atmosphere If you do not want to have your soul taken, stay away from the hospital If you do want to have your soul taken, use the hospital - you can save the world from all the doom it faces If you're looking for a scary game to play with your friends this Halloween, you're in the right place. This game is really scary. Not only is the story good, but the sound design is really good. The setting is really good too, the environment is creepy. I enjoyed the lighting in it. In this version, we have 3 new voices - Jared, Jacob and Jack, including 13 new enemies. (We added a new line: "Oh my god", by Jack.) There are new monsters, such as the Novager. With this new version, we also added new backgrounds. Along with the latter, you can enable subtitles or turn off the music while playing with the option in the game settings. Dark Fracture is an interesting horror game. By far the best thing about this game is the ability to start out as a scientist and then evolve into a character with more information. The poor patient is caught in the middle of a mental hospital by a blonde, sarcastic and bratty girl with a mysterious past. You need to investigate this woman and see if she actually is insane or if she is telling the truth. The controls are also a bit weird. You just point the wand in the direction and it aims for a target. It's easy, but it's weird. Maybe they should have just given you a keyboard control, just like in the olden days. The graphics are really well done. The environments and characters look like they were drawn by a professional artist
