Credit: Church of the Advent in St Albans, Hertfordshire It was the kind of week filled with the kind of symbolism that may be lost in a meaningless string of numbers. Christmas, as we enter 2014, begins with the number 69 as the world marks the 69th anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, the year Japan surrendered and ended the Second World War. 69 was also the address of the new year's address for the House of Representatives in Washington. And at the House ceremony, Democrat Hillary Clinton—the soon-to-be-vice president—saying her thanks to the American people for the support she had received throughout her campaign. Less emotive is the fact that New York's Central Park will be a little less green in 2014. The park has been turning over, often literally, more than a century of trees; now, only about half a million of the park's 86 million trees will be left. Then there is a strange number: 69.69. As we mark the end of 2014, a year that bears the number of decimal points in the internet address for the Los Angeles Times website, the Times itself has published an additional 69 stories this year to mark the start of the newspaper's 77th year in print. If the New York centennial and the 109th 0cc13bf012
