Please look at the time stamp on the story to see when it was last updated. Please enable Javascript to watch this video It's a little known fact: if the perfect model is unavailable, a high school principal makes an excellent stand-in. Sylvie Rain took a picture with a high school principal to help her mother get a job. Now she's not only the face of French clothing brand Chaîne Rêve, but she may very well be the next Wonder Woman. The 16-year-old is the face of designer Dominique Aspe for French fashion brand Chaîne Rêve which specializes in sleepwear for kids. Rain got to this modeling dream gig because she helped her mom, an advertising executive, land an interview at Chaîne Rêve and brought it up to her principal, a friend of the family. Rain made a little extra pocket money over Christmas when she lent her good looks for the company's campaign photo shoot.

Aspe told The Telegraph of London, "The first few days were a little bit surreal, because she'd never done anything like this before." "I thought she was going to be very shy, but once we started she got a lot of joy from it," Aspe continued. "It was that humor that helped her. She was very bright and quick-witted. She's got a great sense of humor." All smiles, Sylvie and her mom hope this experience will help make her mom's life easier by having her pick the outfits she wants to wear. She is also hoping she continues modeling when she's older. "I'm really excited to be part of that company," Rain told the Telegraph. "I might be a bit younger than they're looking for but I think I can model for them because I'm so outgoing and I enjoy meeting people." "I want to be a model like Amala [Mithali] from India," Rain added. "She's got such a great body and she's really popular. She could be free.Alterations in biogenic amine biochemistry caused by experimental pinealectomy in the Japanese quail. The biosynthesis of biogenic amines by pineal organ-kidney fragments from control and pinealectomized Japanese quail was examined by high performance liquid chromatography (HPLC). Seven days after pinealectomy, a small decrease in norepinephrine biosynthesis rate was detected. However, this alteration in biogenic amine biochemistry was not correlated with a statistically significant change in the pineal weight, nor in the total amount of biogenic amines present in the organ. Results indicate that the increase in tyrosine decarboxylase-like activity observed in the pineal of adult rats and newts is not related to alterations in the pineal weight, but rather, to a compensatory mechanism in order to maintain the levels of biogenic amines. // Package json implements encoding and decoding of JSON as defined
