A federal magistrate on Tuesday declined to release a woman arrested for allegedly strangling a former high school boyfriend and watching his corpse on television, and rejected her claims that she was the victim of domestic abuse. After hearing arguments from defense lawyer Steven Parmenter and the prosecution, Magistrate Thomas Odell issued a 12-page ruling in San Diego, saying that the woman, Sarah Tylor, 22, committed a "major" crime in a "concealed location." The woman had already been arrested and held without bail at a private jail. Her attorney, Andrew Karter, declined to comment on the ruling but indicated she was considering an appeal. Tylor is accused of sneaking into her former boyfriend's apartment in January and fatally strangling him in a bedroom after he fell asleep. She then allegedly walked to a television to watch in the apartment complex in front of her former boyfriend's apartment. On Jan. 23, a neighbor called police after noticing blood in Tylor's vehicle in the parking lot of the apartment complex. Tylor reportedly told police she found her ex-boyfriend's body in a closet and that she did not call police because she did not want him to be arrested. Tylor was arrested on suspicion of murder and tried to persuade police that her ex-boyfriend had been abusive to her and she had killed him in self-defense. During a two-day preliminary hearing, Tylor sat in court, occasionally shaking her head. Magistrate Odell on Tuesday indicated Tylor could be tried on the charges of murder and manslaughter if she is found not guilty in the death of her former boyfriend. The magistrate said Tylor's claims of abuse by her ex-boyfriend did not mean she
