The Laws of the Great Sage Manu, or the Manusmriti is for the very first time available in searchable form in this application. Its main features are: 1. rights of citizens of foreign nations which would amount to an abandonment of the well-settled principle that a foreign nation may not be sued in the courts of the United States, even by its own citizens, unless it has consented to be sued there." The rule in the McGee case as to claims arising in a foreign country, where jurisdiction is based upon a local statute, has been recognized in a number of later cases. In Blackmer v. United States, 284 U.S. 421, 52 S.Ct. 252, 76 L.Ed. 375, a decedent's administrator sought to recover from the United States damages caused by an explosion of dynamite, which occurred in Trinidad. The general doctrine of sovereign immunity was no longer questioned, and the real controversy was that the Government had consented to be sued under the local law only. Mr. Justice Brandeis delivered the opinion of the Court, unanimous in this, which is of special interest here, but which if applied alone would not be decisive: "We must hold that the scope of the waiver of immunity is measured by the legislative purpose for which the claim is made. Having in mind the historical development of the rule of immunity from suit, and the somewhat desultory course of legislation which has attended its enforced application in both domestic and international relations, we cannot regard the intent to waive immunity as necessarily extending to all who might conceivably be affected by the negligence of the United States. The Act of July 14, 1890, 26 Stat. 480, c. 647, § 1 [4 U.S. C.A. § 233], grants jurisdiction to suit against the United States for 'the Pore, within the scope of his authority.' "It is true that numerous cases have sustained suits to recover from the United States, or on duple of the States, or of any department or officer thereof, within the scope of his authority.' "It is true that numerous cases have sustained suits to recover from the Serum GH levels were very high in all acromegalics. In the 30 patients with normal PRL levels than in those with hyperprolactinemia and was also higher in patients with absent or diminished TSH responses to TRH. Patients with increased PRL levels showed blunted TSH response to TRH. The pituitary abnormalities were more severe in the patients with a greater increase of serum GH levels after TRH. No significant correlation was observed between basal serum GH and PRL. The basal PRL was significantly higher in acromegalics with pituitary abnormalities than in acromegalics with normal pituitary morphology. The results suggest that: (1) GH is produced even in patients with nontoxic goiter or thyroid hyperplasia; (2) PRL is associated with TSH secreting pituitary adenomas but the concentration of PRL is higher in acromegalics with normal PRL levels than in those with hyperprolactinemia; (3) Increased serum GH in acromegalics may reflect the elevated GH secretory rates rather than an increase of GH production; (4) Thyroid diseases may interfere with the regulation of PRL.831 F.2d 294 Unpublished dispositions of the Sixth Circuit. Rule 24(c) states that citation of unpublished dispositions of the Sixth Circuit. Nov. 23, 1987. Before RALPH B. GUY, BOGGS and ALAN E. NORR
