(1998) The History of Social Control in India: The PassiveSuicide attempts in young adulthood are common and may predict psychopathology in adulthood, but the precise nature and exact timing of onset are not yet well-established. This project is a five-year study of the onset of suicide attempts in early adult life, using a longitudinal, prospective design and a life-course perspective.

The study will recruit a sample of 500 women, and 200 men, age 22 to 35 at recruitment. A subset of 180 of these subjects will be followed annually, for five years, for a second interview and suicide attempt. The specific aims of the project are to: 1) identify risk and protective factors for suicide attempts in young adulthood; 2) identify factors that predict subsequent suicide attempts in young adulthood; 3) examine the consistency over time of the timing of initial suicide attempts; and 4) characterize the natural history of individuals with suicide attempts, such as substance use, psychiatric comorbidity and current psychiatric symptoms. Suicide attempts in young adulthood are a critical public health problem, yet the epidemiological literature on this problem is sparse, and few prospective studies have examined their timing, course, and risk and protective factors. A major strength of this study is its prospective design, the large sample, the multiethnic composition of the study sample, and the prospective collection of data on risk and protective factors, such as comorbidity, exposure to abuse, and psychiatric symptoms. We will also examine the interaction of childhood trauma with other risk 6d1f23a050
