Lung cancer screening is a controversial topic. The aim of this study was to compare the use of magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) as a visualisation method with that of indocyanine green (ICG) in asymptomatic smokers undergoing lung cancer screening. Asymptomatic subjects were enrolled for lung screening using MRI and ICG. All examinations were performed on one day. Morphologic changes on MRI and ICG were scored visually by experienced radiologists. The medical records of patients and the histology reports of the resected lung specimens were reviewed. Forty-six asymptomatic subjects, including 23 with a previous history of smoking, were enrolled in the study. MRI revealed five patients with lung cancer in four patients with small nodules and one patient with a large mass. ICG revealed four cases of cancer in three patients with a small nodule and one patient with a large mass. Histology of the resected lung specimens showed that the detected lesions were malignant. Malignancy rates of MRI and ICG were 4.3% and 4.2%, respectively. In a cohort of asymptomatic smokers undergoing lung cancer screening, the detection rate of malignancies by MRI was comparable to that by ICG. However, MRI showed a larger lesion size than did ICG.Q: pk is not a valid parameter for this service I am writing a code for the Get request I am using However, I am getting the following error while running it, 'pk is not a valid parameter for this service.'
