{#s0020} ===== In our experience, cytotoxic therapy should be considered in order to reduce the tumor volume. The use of a second look, after 3--6 months, could play a key role for cases of long-term remission. The exact timing of the second-look biopsy, based on the response to initial treatment, still remains to be determined. Nevertheless, biopsies should be planned and done for as long as possible to establish the length of remission. The interval between samples should be minimized to assess the accurate amount of residual disease. Therapy should be stopped in the presence of continuous long-term remission or when the patient becomes pregnant.

The latest victim of the violence is a one-year-old girl named Leah Jordan. At 7:00 PM on Saturday, July 14, Leah's father was asleep when she began experiencing breathing problems and he gave her CPR. When he realized she was not breathing, he and his wife rushed her to the nearest hospital, the University of Washington Medical Center. They were told there was nothing they could do. The hospital's medical staff failed to realize that Leah had stopped breathing. She was taken by ambulance to the King County

Medical Center in Seattle. After spending two hours at the King County hospital, the doctors were able 6d1f23a050
