Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the field of computer network usage, and more specifically to systems and methods for using a rules engine to identify and analyze utilization of a network resource by an actor and provide an effective resolution of the identified utilization with respect to the actor. 2. Description of the Related Art An organization's computer network is an essential part of the infrastructure for that organization, such as a corporation or university. It is thus critical that the network be managed in an efficient manner so as to provide maximum benefit to the organizations of which it is a part. The demands on the network infrastructure and the organizations' computers, networks, and users are increasing as a result of the increasing use of the Internet and World Wide Web, e-mail, intranets, extranets, wireless technology, and other network-based technologies. In particular, the growing numbers of users using such technologies have created a proliferation of attacks such as denial-of-service attacks, spyware attacks, botnet attacks, large-scale distributed denial-of-service attacks, and worm attacks. From the perspective of an organization, such attacks can be extremely disruptive to its operations. For example, an attack may affect the availability of a critical resource, such as a database, or subject an organization to liability for the infected computer. Furthermore, although such attacks are often merely annoying, they may be malicious, such as in the case of spyware or botnet attacks. From the perspective of the attackers, such attacks can be an efficient method for compromising computer systems and gaining access to sensitive information such as credit card numbers, social security numbers, etc. The emergence of these attack types and other network-related attacks have forced organizations to analyze the network to identify the specific types of attacks that are occurring on the network, determine the source(s) of the attacks, and determine the risk presented by such attacks. To this end, organizations have turned to network monitoring systems to perform such 6d1f23a050
