MicroRNA-377 regulates the proliferation, migration and invasion of human cervical cancer cells by targeting SNAIL and PTEN. An increasing number of studies have demonstrated that microRNAs (miRNAs) participate in the regulation of malignant tumor proliferation, migration and invasion. In the present study, we used miRNA microarrays to screen for differentially expressed miRNAs in HeLa cells. miR-377 was downregulated in HeLa cells and the differential expression of miR-377 was significantly inhibited in cervical cancers. To further investigate the role of miR-377 in human cervical cancer, we established miR-377 over-expression and knockdown HeLa cell lines, and observed that miR-377 over-expression inhibited HeLa cell proliferation, migration and invasion, while inhibition of miR-377 had the opposite effects. In addition, using TargetScanHuman v5.1 combined with qRT-PCR and Western blotting, we found that miR-377 can directly target SNAIL and PTEN. Furthermore, we observed that an increase in SNAIL protein levels and a decrease in PTEN protein levels were observed in cervical cancer tissues compared with adjacent non-tumor tissues. This study indicated that miR-377 has the potential to act as a tumor suppressor and can be used as a novel target for the treatment of cervical cancer.
