access. Here, as elsewhere, the Commission has legislatively delegated authority to regulate matters that lie in the sphere of the police power to the single body best qualified to perform this public task. See Gerhold Constr. Co. v. Industrial Comm'n, 180 Colo. 102, 502 P.2d 116 (1972). The fact that the legislature may have failed to anticipate this particular situation is a matter for the legislature, not the Commission. See id. See also Bickerstaff v. Industrial Comm'n, 684 P.2d 885 (Colo.App.1984). Accordingly, the order of the Commission is affirmed. TURSI and RULAND, JJ., concur.

Uremic acute kidney injury: the impact of hyperuremic suppression therapy on extra-renal calcifications. Patients with chronic kidney disease (CKD) and advanced dialysis have an increased risk of vascular calcification. Vascular calcification is an independent predictor of cardiovascular morbidity and mortality in dialysis patients. CKD is an important risk factor for the development of cardiovascular morbidity in the general population. The kidneys play an important role in mineral homeostasis and the progression of vascular calcification. Currently, arterial calcification is recognized as a major pathophysiological process in CKD that is associated with increased mortality and cardiovascular morbidity. Several studies have shown that renal biopsy and a limited amount of data from non-renal biopsy tissue show a significant positive correlation between the severity of the histological damage in the renal glomeruli and arteries and levels of circulating uremic toxins in the serum. Previous observations have demonstrated that dialysis patients have a high incidence of intima media calcification (IMC) and an increased risk of mortality. However, the etiology of IMC in dialysis patients is not well understood
