revealed another loss while its subscriber base remains stalled. Sprint has been in the news lately for losing lots of valuable customers to its larger competitor Verizon (NYSE:VZ) and newly rivaled rival AT&T (NYSE:T). Now the news is out, even Sprint's smaller competitors are looking at its performance. Sprint tried to push investor confidence by announcing a new deal for its own LTE (Long Term Evolution) network, and AT&T was quick to protest Sprint's announcement. AT&T is not planning to offer LTE until 2014, and

Verizon just announced its own LTE network plans. Adding to the dour start to the year is Sprint's total losses of $641 million. AT&T is surpassing Sprint on the subscriber front, but its losses are growing and rapidly (if that is possible). And what are Sprint's next moves to spark investor confidence? It has been moving closer to Verizon and AT&T in terms of pricing. [ad#Mobile_Banner_728x90] Sprint's new era seems to start with an announcement that it may sell its wireless service wholesale to other service providers, while not naming any names. This really gives the impression that Sprint is courting Verizon, while AT&T is looking at Sprint as its new c6a93da74d
