In this article, we report on the development of a set of indices to measure the level of organizational complexity of hospitals and nursing homes. Our data come from a sample of 63 hospitals and 75 nursing homes in Central Sweden. The study explored the internal and the interorganizational relations in these two kinds of settings. A conceptual framework was developed that guided the study and a set of descriptive and explanatory indices were developed to assess the level of organizational complexity. The indices were tested through structural equation modeling and the quality of the fitted models was judged using a blind test with a group of experts on the topic of the organizational complexity. The overall model fits well, and provides support for the existence of a systematic relationship between the variables in the model. We argue that the analysis of this kind of data has as its main advantage the well-established data quality of Swedish register data and that the set of indices developed in this study provides a means to compare and enhance the quality of the data when they are used for research purposes.Family Law The family courts are extremely important for a family law case, because the court makes a decision on the children's future and their parents' future, with a view to the benefit of the children.
