In the Chinese market, the share of imports in consumption remained higher. At the same time, unlike the European market, where the share of imports in consumption was about 35%, the share of imports in consumption in China was higher and amounted to 42%. According to Mr. Yu, in terms of composition and quantity of consumption, these elements can be divided into four groups. The first group includes engineering products, primarily means of production; the second group includes food industry products, such as products like sugar, rice, cereals; the third group includes means of production and goods belonging to the first group; the fourth group includes consumer goods, such as light industry and textile goods. China imports about 35% of each of these categories. At the same time, the share of imports of machinery and equipment is currently about 60%. The share of consumer goods imports is about 45%. To estimate China's foreign trade structure, there are currently a number of methodologies, including traditional approaches for China's national statistical services using absolute and relative indicators. According to the traditional methodology, to estimate the structure of foreign trade based on absolute indicators, the share of imports is: $\frac{Q}{M}$, where: Q - imports, million tons; M - international trade, \$ billion. In this case there is a significant imbalance in the structure of imports. Thus, in 2011 the share of imports in the structure of the world imports amounted to only 17.4% (Fig. 1). Fig. 1. Dynamics of the absolute indices of China's foreign trade At the same time, the share of export in the structure of the world export rose from 20.6% in 1980 to 37.2% in 2008 (Fig. 2) and the share of export in the structure of foreign trade increased from 17.4% in 2011 (Fig. 3). (Fig. 2) and as of the end of 2011 it rose up to 39.6% (Fig. 3). Fig. 2. Structure of China's Export in 2008. Fig. 3. China's share in the structure of the world export in 2008 According to the results of 2011, China's share in the structure of its global export reached 37.2% (Fig. 4). Fig. 4. China's share in the structure of its global export in 2011. In the structure of China's import from 2008 to 2011, there was noted a firm upward trend in the proportion of finished goods to commodities. In 2011, the volume of China's imports amounted to \$1 trillion. In 2011, the volume of China's imports amounted to \$1 trillion and \$45 billion. In 2011, the volume of China's imports amounted to \$1 trillion and 45 billion, which is by 15.6% more than in 2010. China is the world's number one exporter of coal. In 2011, China exported 114.39 million tons of coal to other countries. China exported 63.37 million tons (or 60.7%) of coal to Asia-Pacific countries. The share of coal in the Chinese export structure from 2008 to 2011 was on average 28.9% (28.6% in 2008). In the structure of China's imports in 2011, finished products accounted for 50.7% of total imports.
