Comics Has an Editorial Policy on Videogames This past Friday, BOOM!'s website got the editorial policy overhaul that it's been wanting since...since the last time it had one. Given that it's now less than a week away from the release of the first issue of "Gargoyles," BOOM!'s latest supernatural comedy/hybrid RPG manga, it's past time that the company actually have an editorial policy. Now's a good time because BOOM! has confirmed that they've hired Michael Uslan as their new president. The publisher said in a press release that they're excited to have Uslan in charge because "he will bring his strength as a longtime writer of such great properties, including 'Universal' and 'The Dark Tower,' to BOOM! Studios and its growing stable of comics and brands." Here are some highlights from the Boomerang Press release: BOOM! Studios is an all-digital comics publisher currently devoted to creating and curating an array of iconic film and television characters and properties for audiences of all ages. Starting in 2014 with the acquisition of KaBOOM!, a leading syndication and licensing company for the children's entertainment industry, BOOM! Studios has produced high-profile comic and prose adaptations of such legendary properties as Goosebumps, G.I. Joe, Jem and the Holograms and Voltron. In July 2014, BOOM! Studios launched BOOM! Box, a subscription box service focused on new and classic graphic novels, trading card sets, action figures and more inspired by the characters featured in its catalog. Each month, subscribers receive between one and five items. Michael Uslan has been called the "dean of modern-day horror," and is the bestselling author of more than a dozen bestselling books and novels, including Dark Awakening, The Shadow Chronicles, Dearly Departed, The Golden Child, The Neverending Story, The House of Usher, Creatures of the Night, I Know What You Did Last Summer, The Haunted Mask and The Slinking Shadow.
