Two young women, aged 23 and 17, were killed while out shopping in the highly militarised area surrounding Damascus airport on December 31. They had been shopping for dresses for friends' coming of age celebrations. The killing took place at around 7pm on Saturday, when a sniper shot the two women dead while they were standing on the street. The army launched air raids on the area shortly after the assassination. In addition to the killing of the two girls, at least five other women were also shot dead, according to human rights activists. However, the identity and involvement of the assassin or assassins remains unclear. Some reports said they were shot with a Kalashnikov while others suggested they had been lined up against a wall before being shot in the head. There was no immediate word on whether the women had been targeted because they were the girlfriends of men perceived to be pro-regime. 'Helpless in the hands of the regime' A cameraman from the Al-Watan television channel reported the women's bodies were inside a shop. "These were two girls [and] they were killed after they left [a] shop. A hooded armed man entered the shop and shot one of them in the head, and then shot the other c6a93da74d
