Track changes. Instantaneously detect and import edits as they are applied, even if those edits aren't represented in your CAD drawings. Receive timely, relevant feedback on your drawings, just like with a text revision control system. How to use them: Autodesk Markup is an industry standard, integrated CAD environment that provides editable content in your drawings from a source outside of your CAD application. Its fully automatic import of changes ensures that you receive the most accurate information possible. Markup Assist is designed to help you use AutoCAD with Markup in an optimal way. Support from live software to take the guesswork out of the process. You can select a segment of a drawing to receive feedback, or receive feedback for entire drawing components, such as entire sheets or entire block lists. Enjoy editing drawings with more confidence. Design changes are imported directly into the drawing you're working on, and you can leave the drawing open and running while you interact with your source content. AutoCAD is the only mainstream CAD application that supports editable content from any print or PDF source. Autodesk Materials New materials, 3D printing, and milling: Add the latest materials to your models, including additive construction material for new ways to design and manufacture your own custom parts. Design for additive construction. Now 3D printed products can more easily use any material. Set up 3D printing processes like stereo lithography and selective laser melting so that your models can be printed in the best conditions. Make them your own. Milling or sawing any design in a 3D printed part is now as easy as designing on paper or importing into your CAD model. Design and print a custom 3D part, and quickly and easily turn it into the real thing. How to use them: Get the latest materials for 3D printing your custom parts. Add support for additive construction to models and parts. Import designs for 3D printed parts to be machined or milled. Design and print any 3D model to show to the rest of the engineering team.
