Various physiologic, pharmacologic, and epidemiologic evidences suggest that allergic inflammatory process may be involved in the pathogenesis of airway diseases such as asthma and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). Among the several triggers of allergic reaction, endothelial cells play an important role in the progress of inflammatory disease. Especially, inflammatory cytokines such as tumor necrosis factor-alpha (TNF-alpha) and interleukin-1 beta (IL-1 beta) and growth factors such as platelet-derived growth factor (PDGF) exert their biological effects by modulating endothelial functions and these factors are thought to be involved in the pathogenesis of airway diseases. We have examined the effects of inflammatory cytokines on endothelial cells in vitro and in vivo. Moreover, we investigated the endothelial responses to these inflammatory cytokines in allergic inflammatory process of airway diseases, including asthma and COPD. In this review, we ff5e5ca8c9

Psychiatric manifestations of lupus erythematosus (LE) are frequent and often difficult to identify. In most cases, the psychiatric disorders are mild and can be treated effectively with psychotropic drugs. However, severe neuropsychiatric manifestations as, for instance, epilepsy, neuropsychiatric lupus or catatonia are uncommon and may occur in several variants. Central nervous system involvement in SLE may occur as a primary manifestation of LE, during systemic lupus erythematosus, or after a treatment with drugs used for other diseases. This is reflected in the fact that nearly 10% of patients with SLE have central nervous system manifestations. Neuropsychiatric lupus, a type of neuropsychiatric lupus, is a rare neurological disorder which is supposed to be the outcome of the combined influences of antiphospholipid antibodies (aPL), nephritis, hypertension and vasculitis, and which may have an aggressive course. Secondary neuropsychiatric lupus may be a complication of LE or may develop independently of the disease. Catatonia is a non-epileptic form of neuropsychiatric lupus which is usually triggered by fever and has a rather benign course. It is estimated that about 5-10% of the general population have neuropsychiatric lupus, catatonia or neuropsychiatric lupus.Q: Error in R for loop that resets the values of a vector to NA and loops them in a function I am a beginner in R and I wanted to define a function that calculates the average rainfall for years 2010-2013. The average is defined by a vector of rainfall values and the years (2010, 2011, 2012 and 2013) are included in the function itself. When I define a vector with the values of the years to be repeated, my function works fine but when I try to reset the values of a
