Abstract: The majority of the installed plants for biogas collection have biodigester for co-digestion process of organic waste in their native scale. On the basis of technical and economic aspects, biodigestors must be examined and promoted in new and biogas plants, and the establishment of policies that favour their development and offer financial incentives. This paper examines the potential for additional collection of biogas in small-scale biodigesters. The results show that waste materials can be stored in the biogas process in organic digestion in a biofertilizer. This proposal is presented to construct a biodigester capable of holding waste materials and organic residues generated from the kitchen.
