

There are many versions of the Koran, as well as many translations of the Koran into various languages. In this case, the version of the Koran is in Bahasa Indonesia (Indonesian). One of my professional responsibilities is to teach English to part-time college students in Jakarta. In the course of one week, I have observed that the students are confused and confused by the requirements of Covid. In the course of this month-long study, I have noticed that the more advanced students (those who have been in my course for more than one semester) are aware of the key religious texts that make up the corpus of the Bible. These students know that the Koran is the second book of the Bible (Genesis being the first), and they know that the hadith (the oral tradition) is the third book of the Bible. While they may have heard of Muhammad, and might be able to call him a prophet, for example, they often remain confused about whether he was the seventh son of God, or a man. The version of the Koran that I use in my teaching is the An-Nur version of the Koran, translated by Abdulaziz ibn Abdullah al-Buzurjani. The An-Nur, also known as the Sunni version, is based on the four major pillars of Islam: faith, prayer, charity, and fasting. It is the most widely practiced version of the Koran in Indonesia and the other parts of Southeast Asia. It is also the most popular version of the Koran in the world. Like any other book, we have variants of the Koran, including the Kutub ul-Koran, or the primary Koran. As a comparative and historical exercise, however, there is no need to worry about variants when reading the An-Nur version. In the An-Nur version, the verses are arranged in groups of 114, and the entire collection comprises approximately 13,000 verses of the Koran. In English, this collection is known as the Noble Koran.
