named "the sorcerer" because of his trickster abilities, connor also remains immortal after absorbing kell's energy. he's teleported away to a new location where he encounters two other immortals - methos and connor's mother (played by linda hamilton). connor confronts them and learns his true identity, and the foursome returns to the battlefield together. once there, connor and methos duel, and connor finds himself drawn to the "headless horseman" that had left him a bottle of blood in the first movie. methos gets the better of connor, who finds himself back in the past with the horseman again, who tells him that his mother's spirit is trapped in the past and that he'll do anything to protect her from the horseman. connor absorbs the horseman's blood and finds that he can also control time and create "ticks" by squeezing the bottle. he reveals that his mother has been in that time, but the horseman won't let him see her. the horseman then gives connor one more chance to free his mother. he and methos go back to the battle, where they find the other immortals, and connor and methos confront kell. the two immortals duel, and kell and connor fight on the battlefield. connor uses his powers to stop the battle, but kell defeats him. he then kills methos and absorbs connor's energy. after the battle, kell reveals that the horseman was right and that he's their father. he says that connor will be dead in 24 hours unless they find his mother, and they then have a brief reunion with his mother. connor, now "the highlander," spends the rest of the film battling the evil kell. though the script doesn't even mention the production or shooting of highlander: endgame in the year 1989, the events of the movie take place in 1987. in the present day, the film was released in 1988.
