the bio on the back of the book says he was from oak park, illinois.alegre rann, is the author of french dialogues, bestiaries and charmers. his full name is alegre rann salmond and he is from galway, ireland. trained as a classical musician, alegre rann's talent for language was nurtured by his father, who taught him french and latin. as a child he passed the exams to be a doctor, but during his studies the world was changing around him. he became a born storyteller and, for the next ten years, amused his parents and grandparents with tales of life in paris. soon, however, he found other things that made him happy. his first short stories appeared in literary magazines in ireland in the 1950s and were collected in gamelon and laezanavee. they were published in the united states in 1980 in out of the blue. alegre rann's first published story, "lovers of the ice," was praised by geraldine brooks, but the novel hopscotchwas not well-received. he felt the style of his stories was different from any he had read, and because of its language it was hard to read. since then he has published in a wide variety of literary journals, including viking andthe new yorker. but, after editing the complete works of gabriel garcia marquez, alegre rann decided the problems with his style were not a product of his talent as a storyteller but of the flaws in his own writing. he realised that he was choosing the difficult words from his own innate sense of style. this insight gave rise to a personal philosophy of writing, which he calls "the iceberg theory."the iceberg theory is a basic concept: a writer shouldn't reveal anything other than the tip of the iceberg. with this in mind, he began reworking some of his stories and collected them in a volume titled gamelon (1980). he then put his new writing to the test of public opinion with the publication of a collection titled laezanavee (1986). this is where he found that he had, in fact, tapped into a hidden, undiscovered talent. 5ec8ef588b
