fruity loops are always free to use. if you want to play around with fruity loops, you can create your own music, or get a free sound bank with over 1000 loops and sounds. there are also a range of other free song and sound packs available on the fruity loops website too. fruity loops 5 comes with a sample pack called “classic samples”. it has over 1,100 samples, including piano, strings, synths, drums, pads, and more. you’ll find everything from electronic to urban, country, acoustic, and lots more. here is a list of the included samples: subsonic, which is a windows based server is the best option for those who are looking for a music server. it's free, very easy to use, and has very high configurability. we have a large number of users who use it to stream music from their pc's. subsonic uses a web server, so there are no real configuration steps needed. just start up the subsonic server and select your music from your file system and start streaming. there is a basic option to set up your subsonic profile and then you can just start streaming. you will be asked to enter your username, then enter the password that you want to use for your username. you can use this password for other web-servers that use the same username. there is also a plugin called subsonic server for xmpp that lets you use your existing jabber account with subsonic. i have been developing dsp for over 10 years, in conjunction with real production, and musical skill, and recently did a freeware plugin, taking some of the best of minimal resource dsp, and put it into a freeware limiting pluagin. it is probably the best freeware limiter available, and sounds like fully professional daw stuff. i am doing a bigger commercial version, with some additional stuff, one would expect from that, so if you want the extras, they will soon be available in a commercial product aswell.

While i do not have full version yet, the free one is enough for me so far.
