
Liquid Fatal Out Of Memory Battle Realms 18

i could not have put this better myself. i have three sisters, all older than me. i do not think any of them has died yet. i would be fine after that. i believe that is our karma in this life, to be able to embrace our loved ones who have gone before us. as for myself, i had an extended illness with very similar symptoms to your brother and husband. i have been unable to raise my blood count and will likely be on my death bed for many months as well. there is nothing left for me to live for. i have lived a life of exceptional achievement, raised three children and there is nothing left. it would have been easy to escape and have a nice, quiet, simple life, with wonderful friends, but that is not how i want to die. i refuse to be the destroyer of all that i have and have been given. i intend to live my last days in a way that is true to who i am. i will live, laugh and love. that is how i want to die. it was the most heart-rending experience of my life. my husband died six years ago at 43. we had 6 sons but the boys were grown. when he died, the reality of not having a relationship with my husband hit me like a ton of bricks. i often lost focus as i was so very sad, overwhelmed and angry. my most memorable moment came one day on the front porch of our new home, when i screamed at him. how could i have been so stupid and selfish as to let this happen? my boys had been trying to comfort me but it was all to no avail. i was spitting about how i had let him down, how i was a worthless piece of manure, etc. i never realized how much i missed the relationship with him until that moment. then came the anger, guilt, despair, fear, etc. this was the first time i ever felt these things but it brought them rushing back to the forefront of my mind as i cried and screamed and hurt. no amount of therapy was able to put the pieces back together again but my heart was healed somewhat. today, things are fine, i see my husband in my sons and many wonderful memories, my marriage is great, my boys are wonderful. i am so very grateful for the situation as it is truly what i deserved but i feel the key was me taking the time to heal. honestly, i think i would not be here writing this if it had not been for that terrible, sad, painful day. like you, my memory will be a part of me forever. i will never forget my loving, wonderful husband. he was an amazing father, friend and husband. if you need to talk, i would be glad to listen.
