connecting and creating value between the masjid and the home is the ultimate goal of masjidl. athan frame technology is the ultimate solution to that goal. with athan frame, any household can become an islamic house of worship. an innovative, app-based technology, it allows masjid leaders to create powerful masjid-specific content and information with their masjid's content. athan frame collects that content, and makes it available to households anywhere, creating a dynamic and dynamic content platform. it provides a variety of information like duas, daily hadith, relevant social media content, and the masjid's calendar all available to a smartphone user, providing instant access to meaningful, masjid-specific content. while using speech synthesis to present advertising messages is becoming more common, the primary use of speech synthesis has been to create audio or video that sounds natural. the first programs to enable this were called text to speech, or tts. these days, many people have access to the most sophisticated voice recognition software. many online services offer this to their customers, and some of them are free. to our amazement, a number of major consumer electronics manufacturers have developed high-end voice recognition software that is free. a program we like is called festival, and can be downloaded from its home page. it is powerful, easy to use, and is fully customizable. the newest technology for digital signage is a mix of audio and video. a number of manufacturers offer self-contained devices that can either play video or audio, or show a video on a display. the things are usually called a video wall display, but because they are mostly made by computer companies, we will refer to them as wall display systems. these are highly configurable devices that can be installed in an office or a retail store. often, they are set up to play messages in a loop. for example, the store owner might want to change the message on the wall display each day to promote the newest item in the store.
