[Date added: 03.02.2014] Safari Alternatives Safari is the web browser by Apple, designed specifically for OS X. It is the browser you probably have installed on your computer. Safari, as you can tell from its name, was not developed by Mozilla or Google, but by Apple. Safari can be downloaded for free from the Apple website and is available for download on your computer or mobile device, so it is perfect for your computer. This web browser allows you to download websites into a special "Safari" folder on your computer so you can access them later through the Internet. Safari comes with a host of settings which can be customized to your liking. You can change the default search engine, modify the type of cookies, and change the cursor speed. Safari is a fast browser and its user interface is not too complicated. The browser does not come bundled with any plug-ins, add-ons, and extensions and offers a good user experience when browsing the web. If you are looking for the fastest web browser to be used on your Mac, then Safari would be the best choice. The purpose of this post is to collect various conference post-mortem reports. There is a different one for each conference (except for the MIT SMAC). I'll add links to them in this post. I'll also add links to conference discussion threads on the machine learning mailing lists. I do not claim that these reports are authoritative, but they provide interesting insights. You can also check this page, which provides links to recent conference post-mortems. MIT SMAC: a brief report The conference was on June 4-5. I 2edc1e01e8 iTopia is a small but powerful app that enables you to put the log files generated by your iPhone or iPad to your PC. The file format is very simple, so you can open these log files with your favorite viewer, download them, save them and so on. iTopia can also monitor certain events in your iPhone or iPad, such as battery status, cellular network status, etc. You will also be able to import and export text, ringtones, multimedia files, the list goes on. So do you want to have all of your log files at hand, or are you looking for a tool to import text, photos, videos, music and other data? In either case, iTopia is your first choice. Key features + Export log files + Monitor events on your iPhone or iPad + Create, edit, duplicate log files + Import and export text, photos, videos, audio, contact + Find documents in your iPhone or iPad + Delete log files + Change the log's owner You need to install this app if you want to import and export text, contacts, notes, calls, SMS messages, images, audio files, videos, ringtones, live wallpapers, home screens, calendar events and podcasts from your iPhone or iPad to your computer. You will find several export options for you to choose from: a simple text file or a file with a CSV format. You can also save your files to the same folder as the log files themselves. Importing is also easy to do. Simply drag and drop the log files from your computer's file manager and you're done. The log files will be imported in their own directory. You will also be able to edit, duplicate and delete log files and change the log's owner.
