Joe Hockey was urged to ditch the carbon tax within months of taking office, but he's still not doing it. Labor is ramping up its plan to repeal the tax, with this morning's party room meeting considering a strategy to force the reluctant Liberal backbencher to dump his deal with climate change advocates. A group of about a dozen Labor MPs met last night and discussed the plan. It comes after a speech from Senator Nigel Scullion prompted an official request from Tony Abbott to withdraw the government's carbon tax repeal legislation. The move came days after the government's newly released mid-year economic and fiscal outlook showed Australia's greenhouse gas emissions are increasing at a much faster rate than expected. That's due to a combination of higher energy prices and the carbon tax. The Treasurer's promise to scrap the tax after the May 14 budget is under the microscope, but Mr Abbott had already fessed up to the deteriorating climate change situation. "The carbon tax is not working. We can do this at the federal level," Mr Hockey said on Tuesday. But the amendment 79a2804d6b
