Possible because the map is designed to maintain the maximum possible amount of interactive area per square kilometre in the game. The ZETA landscapes are not long-time action, it was without a doubt the most entertaining game of the season. In the end, the Rays clinched the AL East crown (and the best record in baseball) thanks to a 13-6 win over the Twins at Fenway Park in 15 innings on September 26th. The games ended with a Rays' victory in the top of the 15th and a Twins' win on the bottom half of the inning thanks to a Keuchel wild pitch. There's only one better game we've ever played, and I don't care how much you play the Roger Maris card; there's only one day in September on which a World Series like this came together. You couldn't have scripted it better. And we earned it. Yup, we earned it. Looking back at the last few years, when they've had great starting pitching and good pitching in general — they've had good teams. Now they have a great team. And there will be some great stretches of baseball ahead, whether in October or in March or between now and Opening Day or whether it's waiting in the wings. A lot of good things are on the horizon. It's just how you have to play it. Even as the 21st century dawns, you'll only get so far as a player or a team if you're able to understand, adapt, and embrace the seasons that came before. I like to think of that as living in an eternal state of autumn, winding through the seasons into spring. People ask me, "How long will this last?" I guess I could say, if I'm being honest, that I'll play as long as I can while honoring the days that have gone before, the skills that have served me well, and the friendships that have sustained me. But I won't be here forever, and, to be honest, I won't be around in a year. Even now, there are moments I pass in the games, guys I played ball with in the '90s, guys whose numbers I've bumped, who I'm now out on
