Sometimes I like to watch a video on my iPad and then copy some of the embedded files to a Windows 7 machine to view them there. Is there an app that will do this copying, and let me choose which files to copy, when I'm finished? A: Handbrake is a decent app for this task. It is available for Windows and Mac OS X. You can set up a custom XML file that specifies the exact device, media, and settings you are working with, then tell the app to start. Here is an example of an XML that would be used to start the task. iPad 720p out.mp4 file1.mp3 file2.mp3 Once Handbrake is started, it will go through the process of decrypting the video and creating the MP4, while copying other files specified in the XML. It's very powerful and really easy to use. I've used it to convert movies and video games to MP4 format and have never had a problem. The free version even allows you to convert 1 GB per hour, which should be more than sufficient for most people. Dynamics of f988f36e3a
