The controversial legislation is the first in a series of proposed bills that will cost an estimated NIS 9.2 billion over the next two years, including NIS 2.8 billion already allocated for the purchase of foodstuffs. The other bills seek to punish the Palestinian Authority and the involvement of the Hamas militant group in terrorism. When presented with the fiscal bill, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said that in addition to taxing imports, the government would issue a special tax on Palestinian citizens of Israel. However, an Israeli government official denied the government would introduce a special tax on Palestinian citizens and said the tax introduced on food would apply to the whole population. Despite the claims of Hamas leaders that the tax on food is an attempt to starve Palestinians into submission, the fact is that Gaza, which has already been experiencing severe shortages of food, is the main recipient of the money. Food shortages in the Gaza Strip are the result of a dire situation in which a combination of the Hamas movement's refusal to cooperate with the international community and Israel's continuing blockade of the coastal enclave have cut off access to outside goods and services. Even before the wave of violence broke out in October, Gaza's residents faced dire food shortages, with more than half the population having to rely on food aid from abroad. The dire circumstances have taken a toll on not only the residents of Gaza, but the entire region. Desperate Palestinian families have turned to child labor, with as many as 20,000 boys and girls reportedly trading in forced child labor in Israeli factories as a source of extra income in the wake of the Gaza conflict. Following the fallout from the war, many businesses have resorted to drastic measures to keep their businesses afloat. For example, several key businesses, including giant
