He made a similar warning on Fox News' "Fox and Friends" on March 25. "We would love to hit them with a tariff," Navarro told host Ainsley Earhardt. "But if we did that, they would hit us with a tariff." Trump just nominated a China hawk and big user of tariffs to the top trade post at the Treasury Department. Trump's top trade adviser, Peter Navarro, has engaged in a public war with China since the Trump administration announced in March 2018 a trade war with China aimed at stopping China's investment into US tech companies. In March, Navarro warned that the new tariffs on Chinese imports were a "form of national insurance" that could work. The same month, Navarro helped convince Trump to approve import tariffs on steel and aluminum, telling the president that this would make American steelmakers "the champion." Trump has said that he thinks tariffs have been "the greatest trade tool in the modern era" — and he has now nominated a big fan of tariffs for the top trade post at the Treasury Department. Donald Trump's most senior trade adviser has spent years painting China as a predator and America's most powerful trade adversary. Now he could play a key role in Trump's trade policy. In September 2017, the US imported roughly $17 billion of steel from China. Trump signed an executive order a month later to impose tariffs on steel imports from all countries,
