The effects of the monoamine oxidase inhibitors tranylcypromine and clorgyline on intracellular uptake of 5-hydroxytryptamine were studied in slices of mouse caudate-putamen, and those of the monoamine oxidase inhibitors, clorgyline, pargyline, and (-)deprenyl, and the mixed type monoamine oxidase inhibitors, (-)zacopride and MDL 72222, were studied on the uptake of [3H]5-hydroxytryptamine in the presence of an inhibitor of the uptake system, the serotonin uptake inhibitor fluoxetine. Tranylcypromine, clorgyline, (-)deprenyl, and pargyline, but not zacopride, were found to inhibit [3H]5-hydroxytryptamine uptake, but these monoamine oxidase inhibitors had no effect on the uptake of [3H]5-hydroxytryptamine alone. Pretreatment of slices of mouse caudate-putamen with fluoxetine for 20 h resulted in an increase in the Km of the uptake and a decrease in the Vmax of the uptake. Pretreatment of slices of mouse caudate-putamen with fluoxetine in the presence of tranylcypromine or clorgyline for 20 h resulted in an increase in the Km of the uptake and a decrease in the Vmax of the uptake. These findings are interpreted to indicate that tranylcypromine and clorgyline inhibit uptake via a mechanism independent
