Series Organizer is a lightweight piece of software that was created with one purpose in mind: that of helping you closely monitor your favorite TV shows and the airtime of their next episode, to ensure you never miss one again. Clear-cut and straightforward looks The application features a fairly simple and easy to handle interface; however, if on the first launch it displays a language other than English, you can change that from the 'Settings' section. The main window allows you to add a new series as well as view currently monitored ones, in a green color for ongoing and in red for discontinued. Track your favorite televised shows and never miss an episode again For starters, you will need to populate Series Organizer by adding the TV shows that you wish to monitor. This can be done by means of the corresponding button in the ribbon, which lets you input the partial or full name of the targeted series and displays the available results, so you can choose the one you are after. You can also add a URL link to each one, which will open a web page when double-clicked. Once you have added all of the series you wish to watch, you can click on the 'See Details' button and learn more about the number of episodes and their title, as well as their first air date. All this data is grabbed from the equivalent entry on IMDB.com. By checking the corresponding boxes, you can determine which you have already seen. From the 'Next Episodes' section of Series Organizer, you can discover when your favorite shows are scheduled to air their upcoming episode, specifically the date and the weekday, but not the precise hour. A handy TV show monitor To conclude, Series Organizer is a useful and easy to understand program which aims to help you keep track of all your favorite televised series, informing you of the next air date, while even offering some brief description of each episode, if available on IMDB.com.
