See what I me a song Daryl Hall and John Oates - I Never.Q: How to create a method with a parameterised type which can receive one of a number of types? I'm trying to create an abstract class which contains a method. The method will receive one of a number of types, but can be passed an object of any one of them. I thought this was possible with: public abstract class Base { public void RunThing() { // run a thing } } public interface IThing { } public class SpecificThing : IThing { } public class SpecificThingOther : IThing { } public class SpecificThingLess : IThing { } public class A : Base { }

```
public class B : Base { } public class C : Base { }

However, when I call A.RunThing(); it says Base does not implement the method. Any ideas how to accomplish this? A: You can make class A generic by adding a generic parameter as below.

public abstract class Base {
    public void RunThing() { // run a thing }
}
public interface IThing { } public class SpecificThing : IThing { } public class SpecificThingOther : IThing { } public class SpecificThingLess : IThing { } public class A : Base { } public class B : Base
