Download Revo Uninstaller Pro 4.3.8 License .Q: Should I use HashMap or ArrayList when comparing to a List? So I am writing a program in which the user enters a very large list of data. I am also using a HashMap to store some of this data. In the program, I have to perform a comparison of two lists and determine if they are equal. The comparison I have to do in this case is in the format of: 1) if any element in the list of A matches an element in the list of B, then return true 2) if all elements in the list of A are not in the list of B, then return false 3) if the list of A has any element that is not in the list of B, then return false These are pretty straightforward, but for the first condition, I am confused on how to approach the comparison. My main question is if I want to use a HashMap as I stated, should I check for an equals statement or use the built in equality comparison of ArrayList? String s1 = "1"; String s2 = "2"; HashMap h = new HashMap(); h.put("first", s1); h.put("second", s2); List t = new ArrayList(h.keySet()); List l1 = new ArrayList(l2.subList(0, l2.size())); List l2 = new ArrayList(l3.subList(0, l3.size())); List l3 = new ArrayList(l4.subList(0, l4.size())); for(String item : l1) { if(h.get(item)!= l2.get(0)) { return false; } else { return true; } } A: I suggest writing your own method like so public static boolean areTwoListsEqual(List a, List b) { // check for null if (a == null && b == null) {
