Comparison of the fracture strength of orthodontic brackets bonded to stainless steel and enamel with and without a cyclic fatigue test. Brackets were bonded to an unpolished stainless steel surface and a polished enamel surface (n=10/group). Brackets were tested for fracture strength in a 1-hour, 50,000-cycle fatigue test immediately after bonding or after a 7-day water storage period. Strength data were analyzed with Student's t-tests (pPositive and negative modulators of Epstein-Barr virus-encoded latent membrane protein 1 (EBV-LMP1). The Epstein-Barr virus latent membrane protein 1 (EBV-LMP1) is a pleiotropic signal transducer that modulates cellular gene transcription, mitotic progression, DNA replication and apoptosis. EBV-LMP1 activates the protein kinase c-Raf and the constitutive and inducible activator protein kinases PKC-alpha, PKC-beta1 and PKC-theta in lymphoid cells. LMP1 has been implicated in the pathogenesis of various human malignancies. Inhibition of LMP1 function in the EBV-infected cells represents a potential approach for the treatment of EBV-associated neoplasias. However, the cellular pathways by which LMP1 promote tumorigenesis remain elusive. We have recently demonstrated that LMP1 induces the phosphorylation of paxillin (S178/180) and that this phosphorylation leads to the downregulation of the adhesion activity of the molecule. The negative regulation of paxillin by EBV-LMP1 may be important for tumor cell invasion of 79a2804d6b
