Sony vaio windows 8 recovery maintenance disc windows 8 mac os x hack 999 glitch no survey Suppression of aortic pressure augmentation by beta-adrenergic receptor blockade. The magnitude of aortic pressure augmentation that occurs in the presence of aortic stenosis (AS) can be due in part to the reduced capacity of the normally compliant aortic wall to store the energy of the forward blood flow. Therefore, we have evaluated the effect of beta-adrenergic receptor blockade (pindolol) on the aortic pressure augmentation of AS. Forty-five patients (26 with trivial and 19 with moderate AS) were studied. Aortic pressure augmentation was defined as the difference between systolic pressure and the peak systolic pressure recorded from the arterial waveform in the ascending aorta (aortic pressure augmentation). This was measured before and after 30 minutes of intravenous pindolol (2 mg) or saline placebo, each randomly administered in a double-blind manner. Indices of left ventricular systolic performance were also assessed by heart rate-related variables obtained from the arterial pressure waveform, which showed a f988f36e3a
