But, what about the Belgian songwriter Karel Goeyens (1946-1982)? Is this story of cholera a flop? The Belgians need to know, because Karel Goeyens is the "Father of the Belgian Electro Scene" and only his songs know how to express the melancholy of Belgium. No-one should be left wondering: the Belgian Electro Scene is alive and well. And who said a Karel Goeyens record can't be a hit. For Belgian cholera is the nickname of a large water purification plant at the industrial town of Maastricht in the east of the country. In the late summer of 1982, the plant started to release a dark green water into the river Scheldt. One day the water had such a strong smell that the people of Maastricht realised something was wrong. People started to feel sick. A journalist from a local newspaper decided to write about this in the newspaper. Before long the whole world was talking about cholera. No-one had ever heard anything like this before. So when the campaign
