The Defining Moments of 2004 It's the year that's destined to be remembered not for a historic event but for the glitz, glamour, and charm of an unprecedented US Presidential election campaign. The year's defining events include the Republican nomination of a war-mongering stooge in an attempt to rebuild his party's reputation; the trashing of the party machine at the hands of a Vietnam War veteran; an energized grassroots movement; and a seemingly effortless nomination for the Democrats. 2004 saw the Republican Party increasingly lacking in leadership. Bush was a disaster, as was being America's Number One Ally in the War on Terror. The Democrats nominated a former Presidential hopeful who had been in Congress for 13 years and had nothing to show for his tenure. Gore was loved by the Democrats' grassroots for standing up to the Republican campaign tactics of demonizing him, despite the fact that he won the popular vote by 2 million votes. But as one of the country's most powerful leaders, he could not overcome the enthusiasm gap and his "inevitable" victory. Even worse, the four most powerful Democrats in the Senate, who together should have prevented a vote on the Patriot Act, failed to do so. Democrats, in turn, were powerless to prevent the Hastert Rule, which allowed the Republicans to pass a bill without reading it. It was the first time in the history of the Congress that there was no co-sponsorship of a bill on 2edc1e01e8
