Thanks! Doesn't seem to be working under 10.6.4. For the past several years I've tried to make my life in the ham radio world simpler, and made a series of YouTube videos about it. I'm excited to say that I'm starting a blog to talk about all the topics that make life in the ham radio world worth living. I'll be sharing tips, tricks and general geek talk about radio, operating, maintenance and repairs. I'll also be sharing tips for a more simplified lifestyle with tools and equipment that you can build yourself. Welcome to the ham radio lifestyle. Thursday, July 30, 2015 Since I'm going to be switching from YouTube to a blog platform, I don't think I'll be putting up many of my Vlogs. Instead I'm going to be sharing my experiences with radio equipment. This particular station is an L-Band FM dipole. I've used this station in the past for T9 and for CW on the 40 meter band. The station is currently setup for the Cushcraft DXpedition which is on the 60 meter band. The station is powered by an AHJ-8800 VHF amp and a 4 band LW portable VHF transceiver. The transmitting diode is a 6L6K element. The transmitting diode is a 6L6K element. I'm a bit rusty in setting up and using dipole stations. I'm working on my skills on these particular stations. I hope to be able to make some videos on them soon. This station was originally a 25 watt 2 meter VHF/UHF and a 25 watt 6 meter UHF portables. The antenna was modified to fit the new space on the roof. There's a world of difference between knowing the basics of creating a nutritious and satisfying diet and actually keeping your diet that way. With so many temptations to deviate from your nutritional plan, it's easy to lose focus and throw 2edc1e01e8
